TRAPPING ALLIGATORS.

A Plan Devised to Catch the Animals Alive.

The Times-Democrat.

BOQUE CHITTO, Miss., July 23.—Mr.
Tony Alexander, a successful hunter and trapper, left New York June 12 for New Orleans with the view of catching alligators in traps. He arrived at New Orleans on June 15 and was informed that at Sidell, La., alligators could be found very plentiful. But on arriving at Sidell and taking a long and tiresome search for the alligators, he found he had been wrongly informed. He was not discouraged, but employed an old Spanish sailor named Feter Bamed, who was the owner of a sailing craft and acquainted with the entire coast.

On June 18 Mr. Alexander and his sailor set sails for the Louisiana marsh, seventy miles off. After twe days sailing they arrived at their destination, and on looking around found they had landed right among the alligators. The first trial made to catch the alligators was by setting the traps on the alligator sides that the reptiles make in crawling out to sun.

The traps were adjusted early in the morning, and at noon Mr. Alex ander and his companion found they had an alligator in each trap.

On examination the saurians were found dead, the moveable teeth in the jaws having plerced into their sides. This had a barbarous look to the hunters, and they took the moveable teeth off and set the traps again. At 50 clock they had two more alligators in the most hey could be handled. A plan was soon devised. They pulled the animal ashore and placed a rope in the most hey could be handled. A plan was soon devised. They pulled the animal ashore and placed a rope in the most hey could be handled. A plan was soon devised. They pulled the animal ashore and placed a rope in the most hey could be handled. A plan was soon devised. They pulled the animal ashore and placed a rope in the most hey could be handled. A plan was soon devised. They pulled the animal ashore and placed a rope in the most hey could be handled with perfect safety. The alligator to helpless, and he could be handled with perfect safety. The alligator hand carried to the sail-boat for s him. Mr. Alexander's idea was that by this process he could get closs enough to throw the trap on the alligator. The plan proved a perfect success. One man sat in the front end of the skiff with the trap sot and a strong rope fastened to the spring of the trap, and how of the skiff. On seeing the alligator's eyes he rose quietly, keeping his headlight, so it would shine directly on the alligator's eyes. The boat was moved for ward quietly until within three or four feet of the alligator; then the trap was dropped on his neck or back, catching him around the neck or body. Then the captive would be given slack of the rope until he would worry himself down. He was then carried ashore and his mouth and feet made fast and carried to the sailboat.

Mr. Alexander was asked if the trapping of alligators was not dangerous. He said there was not much danger if one would be careful in handing them until they were made fast with ropes. He caught and handled twenty-one and did not get hurt.

New Orleans 4: Houston 1.

Housron, July 25.—Houston suf-ered a second defeat to-day at the hands of the New Orleans club, the score being 4 to 1. The game was the score being 4 to 1. The game was witnessed by an unusually large crowd and the excellent playing of both clubs kept the spectators enthused throughout the game. The only noticeable feature of the day was the superb playing of Welkart, who was taken from the second base where he has never distinguished himself, and and put into the box.
